the printed gallery biography

Chicago native Janet Kuypers, 6/22/70, worked as an art director, photographer and a writer of short stories, essays and poems since 1990. Janet Kuypers, to relieve stress:

- (a) vents her angst musically with acoustic bands like "Mom's Favorite Vase (MFV)", "the Second Axing" and "Weeds and Flowers", as well as generates her own music oversampling,
- (b) writes so much that she irritates editors enough to get her published over 5,100 times for writing or over 200 times for art work, and gets eight books published, "Hope Chest in the Attic," "The Window," "Close Cover Before Striking," "(woman.)", "Autumn Reason", "Contents Under Pressure", "The Average Guy's Guide (to Feminism)", and "Changing Gears",
- (d) gets tired of thinking about her own pathetic life, so runs a non-profit publishing venture (Scars Publications and Design), where she does extensive internet work and designs books for assorted artists, and edits the literary magazine "Children, Churches and Daddies" so she can read other people's depressing stories, or
- (e) all of the above.

When doing all of that didn't work, Janet quit her job and travelled around the United States and Mexico, writing travel journals ("Changing Gears") and starting her first novel (tentatively titled "The Key to Believing"). After that wasn't enough, she did more design work, edited more books and compiled her writing into a magnum opus collection book, called "The Decrepit Remains". Oh yeah, she also got married and tried to settle down.

Like she knows how.
